

Maya Carrigan

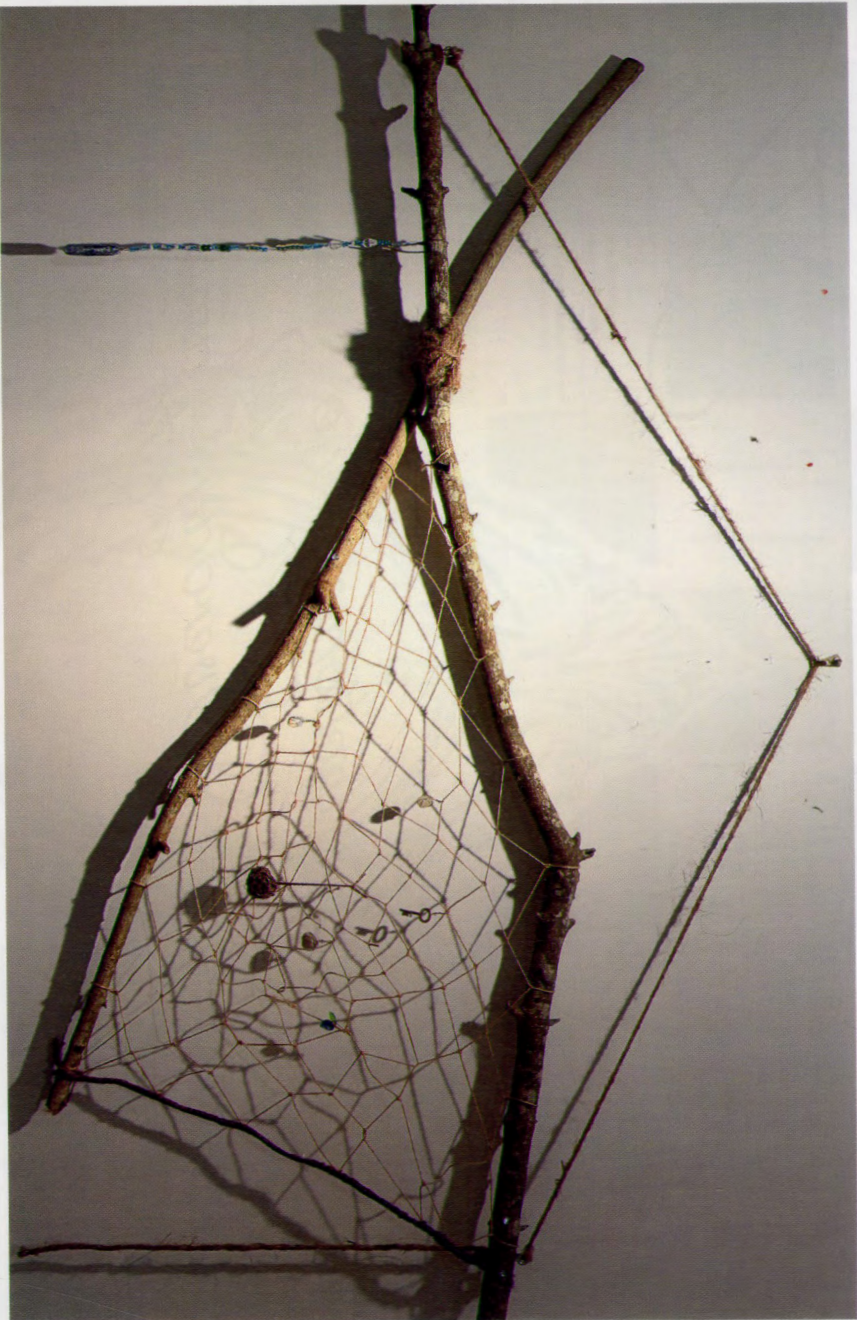

As the nightmares continue, I take it upon myself to catch them Made from twine, sticks from the region of the Montaukett tribe, snells from Nan Beach, LI, and trinkets that keep me safe on my journey to sleep.

Honoring the Montaukett people and their enduring resilience, the sticks and snells echo their memory all the way to Manhattan To understand Our deep relationship with the land, in a world where we are always thinking about the next item to purchase Taking only whats offered, and never more than needed I took these items home and carefully crocheted with yarn as well as wire letting patience and gratitude do the work.

When we can't slow down in life, we take moments like these to connect with the earth and learn how to be a participant in life, not just a viewer Gathering, creating, and weaving remind us how our hands are not separate but extensions of nature.

Through this ritual of gratitude, we continue to honor those who weaved our creation into the earth's beginnings With creation we remember we care. ☆

credits
creator	Maya Carrigan
photos	Maya Carrigan
writing	Maya Carrigan
layout design	Yessenia Vega
medium	Sticks & string

Dreamcatcher